Nothing Pure) Part 1

by k.f

Category: Sonic the Hedgehog

Genre: Adventure Language: English Status: In-Progress

Published: 2000-07-03 08:00:00 Updated: 2000-07-03 08:00:00 Packaged: 2016-04-27 21:06:25

Rating: T Chapters: 1 Words: 4,112

Publisher: www.fanfiction.net

Summary: This story is old + long.... It's set in the Comic storyline just after Robotnic is defeated. A rift into another dimention opens on the Floating island and a dark and powerful new enemy force allys itself with the Dark Legion. Part1 revolves around the

Nothing Pure) Part 1

>
Warning: The following story is rated M-13 for extreme melodrama not >suitable for.... well, anyone.

 The story Is Fanfiction. The characters are © Their Creators (Sega >and Archie for the most part) and used without permission. Except for

for
the non- Dark Legion villains which are by me.
>
>
>
>

- > It was then the silence lifted, or rather he became aware of the noise br>that had always been in the background.

- > The white creature found very little in his mind which he could grasp.

 the concepts of who he was, where he were all shadows, yet they were

>THERE and that, in itself, was enough. A faint yet certain knowledge that this would all make sense in time prevented panic but it was cold, >and his head throbbed...

>

>"So long since the last beginning....so long since I've seen the traily been?" he >wondered as the dim, familiar, green light hit his sleepy eyes.

The light had pierced the shell of darkness where he had >existed for... so long...

> He felt a sudden rush, disoriented as the thick fluid in his pod br>thawed and warmed, he was able to feel his body again.

>The scenes outside were distorted by a wall of water but as he lifted br>his head and for the first time he could see the outside, vaguely as the >bottom of a murky pool yet still enough to remember. He remembered

- gleaming

 'metal capsules; like the one he was in, a gleaming metal floor, a network
- >of immaculately clean pipes running everywhere along the walls and ceiling br>all connect to the capsules or other machines, it seemed to be a large room
- >with some enormous, complicated, flashing machine in the center. A work br>of beauty and poetry and a credit to technology.
- >There was a serene feeling that seemed to radiate here; a harmony and and br>balance. All of it was so real yet seen from his memory rather than his eyes.
- >The memories seemed to come to him as tiny drops of life giving rain on a scorched desert.
- > He became more aware of the icy cold around him as it slowly faded sending < br>chills straight down through his bones. He became aware that he was drawing
- >stale air from a mask suspended by tubes and wires from the outside that br>covered his snout. He lifted a hand to touch the side of his metal shell
- >and realized that his shoulders were being held by steel restraints as br>well as his hips. They were like warm, comforting hands, not meant to trap

- >him but to protect him.
 He carefully moved his arm within the limitations of the restraints and
- >scratched at the hard cold steel. He felt a great need to leave the pod, one feels a need to leave it's egg or womb.
- > This pod; This metal shell was his egg He felt a burning desire to break brout, to be born.
- >
 The fluid slowly started draining through a hole in the bottom
- >of the pod and it was soon gone. The air mask and the restraints snapped open and he fell on the still damp floor of the pod. His first

- >breaths in ages could be seen as icy clouds in the bitter cold air.

 ker>As he got up and looked once again through the window. He was
- >shocked to see a strange face, and the stranger seemed just as shocked to see him. The face slipped to the right and was now out of view.
- >someone he once knew, someone he trusted...

- > Kragok drew back instantly upon seeing that face. It was like seeing the br>face of a ghost. A strange unnatural creature, he thought. Not an echidna
- >at all, but an echidna mutated and mixed with the blood of several lower br>creatures.
- >Those eyes he had seen...were striking, dark red and terrifying, the first time he saw those eyes would haunt his nightmares, yet

- >the look in them seemed like that of an innocent child.
br>As the door of that first shiny pod began to open he
- >wondered if there was any way to go back, to never have come here.

 here if only he had never brought the troops back to the old base
- >they never would have found...this...just waiting. The curiosity to to

 to was now icy fear
- >had taken over it's place.
>
- > The pod door swung up and there was a cloud of steam, this room was colder than his pod had been; in the back of his mind he knew why,

>but he could grasp nothing now, all these sights and toming at him all at once were less like the rain and more >like hail stones.
 The cool air hit his wet fur for the first time in...how long was it?

>He stepped out cautiously, nearly tripping as he took his first steps >br>and surveyed the dark hall.

- > Data on black screens in strange green letters on the giant computer control center in the middle of the room seemed foreign yet familiar.

- >The green glow from spherical lights hanging from the roof was the only light.

- > He glanced at the line of more than a hundred large metal pods the wall with pipes and wires filtering into them, there was

- >also a whole wall of stacked baby sized pods beyond number and br>seemed to somehow know that each contained a living form like him.

- > Then there was a sudden flash of memory... Emotions and people with no events to tie them all together.

- >
 The gray robed echidna stood in front of him, there were also a
- >number of black robed ones hovering around the computers and a

 a clustered semi circle seemed to be forming around him at a >safe distance. He couldn't tell if they were all echidna, their faces were hidden for the most part but from what he could >see they wore expressions of disgust and fear. The gray robbed one br>smiled an uneasy diplomatic sort of smile (trying to mask his fear >and disgust, it seemed.)

 As the creature stood there, soaking wet and cold in front of >the strangers who had invaded his home, awakened him from blissful br>slumber and were now scrutinizing him, he felt similar pands of >fear and disgust. Their black cloaks looked familiar it seemed and to could recall wearing a similar one himself...

>
 This was long before the pods an the hibernation Mobius >was in a dismal state.
 The Black Horde was pulling strings silently from behind the scenes >at first, Fireants and their enemies the Snowcrabs, unable to even tolerate br>each other's existence were raging towards a boiling point in their >ancient war. Outside attempts of diplomacy from all nations failed and it was clear that all of Mobius would be the battlefield... and >the prize in a three-sided war.

> This was the purpose for their creation. An army of identical, >perfect warriors was the goal. Ones who could survive the harsh conditions of a battle between fire and ice yet were still perfectly expendable.

> The Black Horde's scientists could finally be allowed permission from the king to make full, living, genetically altered experiments. A >thought that would have distressed everyone on the planet... if they knew.

- >
 Every attempt was a failure. A genetically engineered animal that
- >was a perfect fighter could not be made and the termination of terminate as ordered straight from the throne. An order to terminate

- >over 500 living experiments.
>
- > Garok, a Scientist and Black Horde officer was head of the project, It br>was thanks to him that so many escaped, or momentarily delayed their
- >fate. Slowly the hunt began for the lost, living experiments.

 Initially loyal to their purpose of protecting Mobius, they offered
- >their service to the crown and were rejected.

- > As their deaths were ordered by the government, by the Black Horde and br>their existence generally not tolerated by civilians it was apparent to
- >the Genetic experiments that any further attempts offer help to the mobians would be met with mistrust or contempt.
- > So, they went into hiding, still intent on stopping the Fireant's war themselves and proving their superiority and rite to co-exist alongside
- >the normal ones.
 It was then that the Black Horde offered them security once again. They - >were not about to give up such a powerful tool as this army when they were given br>a second chance to control them.
- >
 It was an order from the King that would have forced them to terminate
- >the experiment prematurely, not their own will, they br>explained calmly to the shunned and incensed mutants. Which was true although

- >there were still those within the organization who would still have destroyed br>them at the drop of a hat. For the 'Mutants', the promise of temporary
- >security and acceptance could not be passed on easily, especially when their chances for survival without a powerful ally such as the Horde was almost nil.
- >
 He remembered that it took only a year with their help for the Black Horde to
- >take complete control of the Mobian government. They thought that they had br>earned their acceptance but it was apparently not to be....

>-----

- >This was the Black Horde... They were from the Black Horde. They were among the the sones who had used his people for their own gains, promising them

- >acceptance and a home when they ruled Mobius and then them aside like trash... Now they were back? Did they not know

- >how unwelcome they were?
'(What do you want?)" He thought, too scared to say it out loud.
- >"(They obviously wanted to use our power again. The genetically altered or warriors are undoubtedly still the most powerful weapons on Mobius.
- > If Black Horde wants OUR services again then the battle must be very orygreat, indeed. They must know by now that we are too dangerous to be - >treated as pawns.
 I can't BELIEVE that they'd think we'd help them again!)"

- >
 Then an eerie thought hit him... "(How did they get in here if the
- >master had set traps to keep them out? Did they harm the master?

 <
- >
 Kragok's first instinct was to have one of his men blast it, send it back
- >to the underworld where it belongs... but it seemed too scared to prove >br>a threat right now.
- > The shocking outward appearance seemed to foster no danger br>within. It's outside appearance fluctuated between anger and fear.
- >His troops were growing anxious waiting for something to happen, keral reached nervously under their robes for their blasters. If for

- >nothing else, only to feel the security of holding them.
> Listening to the uneasy silence and shuffling Kragok again regretted coming back to the old base. He had been so surprised to see it rebuilt

- >and so different in such a short time that he wanted to explore to see what changes were made and possibly find out by whom.

- >He should have thought why who ever had fixed all this damage thr>had abandoned their work once it was done... It was too late to go back,

- >the decisions had been made. Their own curiosity had started this, there br>was no turning back now.

- >
 It looked around at the crowd of about eight or so dark legion members.
- >Each of them diverted their eyes as he tried to meet the stare of each one.

 He was an albino echidna it would have seemed from a distance, white fur
- >and red eyes a rare occurrence in itself but his abnormalities extended beyond his pigment deficiency. Though few of the - >members of the dark legion had ever seen a fire ant (even from a long distance) they recognized the fur covered antennae that grew from his head
- >could only be from the fire ant species. His two front dreadlocks looked brown but upon close inspection it could be seen that they were actually
- >large, working jaws; fire ant jaws.

 on his neck, chest, and shoulders he appeared to be wearing white pearly
- >armor but he was otherwise naked. The Armor was actually crabshell from br>a third species that contributed to his genetic hibreeding.
- >
 His antennae tingled as he sensed the hate being thrown at him from all
- >sides. It would not subside and the top of his skull began to throb.
 throb.

- > Neither Kragok nor the creature was sure what was going on, each regarded < br>the other as being in somewhat control of the situation right now.
- >
 He was wet and cold and in miserable pain, these people would
- >not even show him hospitality in his own home.

 silence stacked up their thoughts echoed in his head >like dull screams. It got to a level he could not bear.

 "STOP"
- >welling up within him. He could not control.... The dark legion

IT! " he screamed throwing up his hands. Then the fire came started

started

br>to back away... The creature's eyes seemed to get redder, it's fur was >standing up, The Fireant jaws snapped loudly...

"They look nervous now... They regret messing with my people! So stupid of br>them to come back after what they did to us, and after what we did to them!"

- > "Well, here's another taste of it, Black Horde!" He screamed.

 "......I can't do it..... I don't know
- >why but I CAN'T KILL...again...now." But it was too late. He had built up too br>much power, if he kept it inside it could destroy him,

- > "I can't ...keep itin... gottakeepitin....don't let it hit..... br>channel it tosomething"
- >There was only one thing that he could think to channel it to that dit was empty.

- >Without it he could never hibernate again. If his brothers and sisters didn't br>wake up he would be all alone.

- > He snapped his head around to face the pod, his pod, his egg. He tried br>desperately to keep the fire inside him but knew he would fail. With a
- >shout he let it burst fourth from him. An explosion of flame from the the pit of his stomach.

- >He felt himself being enveloped in the fire. The pod where he br>had concentrated his fury was completely vaped. He felt drained.
- >
 A smile crept onto Kragok's lips. For a moment he no longer
- >regretted setting this creature free. It had chosen not to harm them that meant something. If controlled he would make a valuable ally.

- >He saw that this was only an innocent child; but one with extraordinary br>capabilities, if pointed in the right direction he could be the - >perfect weapon. But what if it was not content to only be a 'weapon' ?
 Who cares? Only one question remained "Who was the Black Horde
- >and why had the monster called them that?" (this was the second time br>they had herd the Black Horde mentioned in this place. The first

- >time had been that message that led them to this...) matter, it wasn't important now. Kragok looked around the >strange room up and down the walls trying to estimate the number of capsules like this there were. Such power! He couldn't wait to see what >was in them.

>He whispered.

>5 hours earlier: (WARNING: Flashback within a flashback coming on...

on...

- >
>dr>Julie-Su had been practically shoed away from the scene earlier that
- >morning. It was a cool, cloudy day with a curtain of wet fog settling the ground, yet unusually warm for the time of year.

- > The floating island was at the northern peak of it's flight and well tr>into it's two month snowy season.
- >Only the west of the island ever froze. The Sandopolis, Lava

Reef < br > zones as well as the zones close to them were ice free.

- >
 In the Fortress Zone a cool, depressing shade of blue-gray seemed to
- >envelop everything and coat it all with gloom as sad lonely flakes

 flake
- >Zone was never all that cheery anyway. The island, usually beautifully br>lush and green was cloaked in gray, misty darkness as if it were

- >dressed for a funeral.
>
- > Julie-Su didn't mind this kind of weather but didn't care much for teither. She knew there would be more snow later and everything would

- >be glistening, crystal and pure white. There was a certain br>calmness in the air that hung in the wet mist and a certain feeling of
- >rejuvenation in the tiny droplets of frost. Everything was still and quiet br>like a refreshing dreamfilled sleep, but it also made her very tired.
- > "Yawn"
She sighed heavily. She was drowsy that day and didn't feel like doing
- >much of anything, it didn't help that the Dark legion had been up and about br>in the wee morning hours back at the old base.

- >
 A few hours before in the Sandopolis Zone Dark Legion camp she had
- >awakened to the familiar call of a loud buzzing alarm. It had startled br>her at first, like waking up to a fire alarm. After a split second of
- >groggy confusion she recognized it as the call to assemble and it dring on and off for a full ten minutes.

- > Deep in the pit of her stomach there was an uneasy, sick, foreboding the something bad was going to happen to her that day...
- >Ignoring the spin-cycle washing machine that someone had turned orinside her she tossed the covers from her cot in a disheveled pile
- >in the ground.
 "What a mess!" she thought looking at the tent in disgust. Julie-Su
- >didn't own much but what she did have was scattered on the ground in her tent. She had no place to put anything, much like the rest of - >the Dark legion. Since they had been forced to move into camps (after br>the base was demolished) everyone complained that the living conditions
- >had been severely downgraded. She stood wearily and put on one of her her sniper's mittens that was next to her. She stepped into her large, dark

- >green boots that sat by the edge of her cot and walked over to the corner br>where she had thrown her black robe. As she picked it up a tear almost
- >came to her eye. Every time she saw that robe she saw the life she had ton in a mad rush. Only

- >two more rings and she would have to be in the meeting circle. She tossed items about angrily looking for her other mitten. The bell rang

- >once more and she found it next to a tool box with a shiny lid. She paused the and checked her reflection in the lid. She Yawned and wearily noticed

- >that the pink face staring back at her seemed tired, nauseous and somewhat older.

- >
 Bionic braids flailing behind her she rushed out to the meeting place as
- >the last warning bell rang, just in time to be the last one there. She br>hastily pulled up her black hood to cover her head.
- > Everyone shot 'late' glances at her under their own hoods. She rolled to say "I WAS on time. I got here before the

- >bell stopped ringing."

- > Up on the podium Kragok cleared his throat, and everyone looked up br>attentively. Julie-Su couldn't see him very well through the crowd but
- >she didn't care (he was ugly anyway, she thought to herself) his loud, br>clear voice could be herd well from where she was.

- > " I assume that we are ALL getting tired of using these primitive tents a base of operation and shelter?"

- > The crowd yelled in agreement. One good quality Kragok possessed, she sprudgingly admitted, was that he was an excellent public speaker. He was

- >manipulative and could make you change your mind without your even knowing there had been led into this

- >army. She had lately become disillusioned and wanted out.
br> After meeting a guardian (who was SUPPOSED to be their worst enemy) >and finding out just how 'unevil' they really were she began to question br>everything that she had once been made to believe. The others in the Dark
- >Legion were still influenced by Kragok, they would follow him anywhere it seemed.

- > "I have worked out a plan for salvaging the old headquarters. The base

that was destroyed ..."
- >Julie-Su tuned out of this speech and looked at the sky. The sun could be br>seen as a dim circle covered by a sheet of grey mist. Kragok babbled on
- >about the "accursed guardians" and "Our rightful place on Mobius" but br>she couldn't listen, she felt much too sick. The sinking feeling that
- >came to her when she had thought of Knuckles and the freedom fighters.

 Everything turned black for a few seconds and she felt dizzy and faint.
- >The next few seconds she spent in a state of limbo between pain and sleep.
 She shook it off in time to hear the last of Kragok's address,
- > "...It ought to be safe by now." Kragok finished.

- > "He seems to be implying that any danger would just go away if we br>left it alone long enough...Safe from what? "Julie-Su wondered. She
- >couldn't think of any danger that would just go away. She had thought br>that the main safety concern was debris or exposed electrical wires.

- >The way Kragok made it sound it was as if Knux was still waiting back there to get him if he tried to come back.
- >

- > Everything was packed quickly and stuffed into knapsacks. The tents were torn down quickly and loaded into the vehicles.
- > And so with the sun still low in the sky and barely visible behind the clouds br>they set off in double file lines preceded by a wall of tanks as if

- >this were a march into war and not simply a hike back to their old stomping grounds.

- >
 The army's black flying machines hovered over them like prowling ravens.
- > With each step closer they came to their destination the sinking feeling feeli

- > By the end of it Julie-Su's miserableness gave way to near terror. All

 All

 All shr>she wanted to do was get out of this line and run away.
- > They soon reached the location of one of the base's old secret entrances,
 's fake tree. Kragok pulled one of the branches and opened the familiar
- >passage way. The entrance was an elevator that would only carry one person br>at a time.

- >
 Since there was supposed to be no power in the old base Julie-Su wondered
- >if they really expected an elevator to work.
 It did work
 however, the false tree's trunk slid open and Kragok sent >a scout down first to test for safety (naturally). The scout emerged safely
 safely
 safety could see of his face showed
- >terror and surprise. She knew that there was something wrong.

 He whispered something to Kragok. She watched his face grow angry in
- >disbelief and strained to overhear their conversation, "If you're br>lying...." Kragok threatened.
- > "I assure you, sir. I am not! Isaw it myself!....restored..."
 "Completely restored?" he straightened his tattered grey cloak and looked
- >around at the crowd to scan for observers. His piercing metal eye met br>Julie-Su's and she looked away yet still continued to listen.
- > "Yes.!" said the scout.
There was more said but it was too low to make out, Julie-Su couldn't
- >afford to be caught listening so she didn't try, she only watched what br>was going on. Kragok motioned for a few shoulders to come over. they talked
- >privately for a moment as a tired Julie-Su tried unsuccessfully to hear.

 then he told them to go down the elevator and one by one they went with
- >Kragok last. He remained to give some brief orders.
- >"Now hear this! I want you all to remain here and are not, under any circumstances to follow us. If you are needed I will send for you.

- > That is all." The trunk door slid closed and she watched him disappear through the grey mist.

- >

End file.